Case study: Steven

Steven was a high achiever at the end of primary school, but since moving to secondary school he had lost motivation and his attainment had slipped. He completed his work and behaved well, but was capable of much more. Steven's trajectory is typical of bright students from disadvantaged backgrounds in the UK. Steven is eligible for free school meals (FSM) because his family's income is below £16,190 and he attends a school with above average levels of FSM students. Steven needed to be supported and challenged to reach his potential.

During his time on the TalentEd programme, Steven's tutor challenged him to improve his academic skills and explore his future options. As a result, his confidence and grades have improved and his tutor reported that he has 'made outstanding progress' over the academic year.

*Student names have been changed

Steven's school teacher said that TalentEd had an 'enormous' impact on the attitude and confidence of Steven and his peers. Steven agreed and attributed improvements in the following areas to working with his TalentEd tutor:

- Growth Mindsets
- Study skills
- Critical Thinking
- Future Options
- Applications and Interviews

"I have gained a better understanding of the 'real world' and future job prospects"
